GR1

Protein x-ray crystallography and cryo-electron microscopy are two of the principle techniques used to experimentally determine the structures of macromolecules. While the data collection and initial processing steps are quite different, the fields converge at the model building, refinement, and analysis stage. This course addresses the fundamental concepts and best practices of how to build, refine, and analyze macromolecular structures with an in-depth treatment of the software and methodologies. Students will solve and build protein structures from provided data, or if available, their own, and analyze the quality of the structures using current best-practices and gold-standard metrics. This class picks up where BIOC 667 (Macromolecular Crystallographic Methods I) finishes. Classes will be twice a week; the first a lecture, the second a lab, where the lecture is put into practice. (2.0 credits)

COURSE DESCRIPTION
"Recognizing 'Others': Living with Difference and Disabilities
This is a seminar about persons with enduring stigmatized conditions--people whose lives are at once extraordinary and commonplace, unexpected and average. We will explore and discuss the experiences of individuals who live with disabilities, stigmatized behaviors and appearance, and have chronic illnesses that mark them as different in ways that are devalued, or dangerous, or who deviate from or violate multiple norms. We will examine social, personal, and medical views of individuals with enduring, de-valued differences in anatomy, appearance, functioning, and behavior. Our reading and discussions will

TITLE: Visual Cultures of Biology and Medicine

IDEAS IN ACTION GEN EDS: FC-KNOWING

COURSE DESCRIPTION
This seminar explores visualization, imaging, and graphic representation in biosciences and medicine. The course is anthropological and philosophical ¿ with readings from a range of disciplines. We consider autopsis (seeing for oneself), as well as visual technologies like photography, cinema, microscopy, surveillance, and archives, in broad historical contexts. We compare observation in hospitals and laboratories with observation in other institutions. We consider philosophical aspects of perception ¿ including ways in which even ¿ordinary¿ seeing is bound up with historical and aesthetic conventions, and with the exercise of power. We engage conceptions of truth and believability, both for professionals and laypersons. Most sessions involve discussion of

SPHG 428H.001 | Public Health Entrepreneurship
M, 4:40 pm - 7:40 pm. Instructor(s): Alice Ammerman. Enrollment = 15.
The innovative and sustainable nature of entrepreneurial pursuit can benefit public health initiatives, especially when entrepreneurship identifies economically self-sustaining solutions to public health challenges. This three-credit course will introduce students to basic concepts and case studies of commercial and social entrepreneurship as applied to the pursuit of public health through both for-profit and non-profit entities. This course features many guest speakers with successful experience in public health entrepreneurship in diverse arenas.

At the core of this course is a real-world project where students will work in groups to design their own start-ups, refining both their idea throughout the semester and pitching it to experienced entrepreneurs for feedback.
